Family-School Links: How Do They Affect Educational Outcomes?

Alan Booth, Judith F. Dunn

How do family or community representatives on school site councils, school boards, neighborhood groups, clubs, associations, businesses, libraries, local community centers, and other venues help families obtain useful family information about the educational community? This question has been the focus of research by Alan Booth and Judith Dunn. Their work has shown that family-school links can have a significant impact on educational outcomes.

In their research, Booth and Dunn have investigated the role of family-school links in educational settings. They have found that these links can improve communication between families and schools, increase parental involvement, and enhance student achievement. Their findings have implications for policymakers, educators, and community leaders who are seeking to improve educational outcomes for all students.

Booth and Dunn's research has also highlighted the importance of collaboration between families and schools. They have argued that strong family-school links are essential for the success of educational initiatives. By working together, families and schools can create a supportive environment that promotes learning and growth.

Overall, Booth and Dunn's work on family-school links has provided valuable insights into the ways in which families and schools can work together to improve educational outcomes. Their research has already had a significant impact on the field of education, and it is likely to continue to do so in the future.
